Some random thoughts

HEADLINES: MAN IS RESUSCITATED AFTER BEING DEAD FOR FOUR DAYS! NO STINK! Such a headline would probably only be found in a tabloid or an episode of Haunted Adventures today. So why does the Gospel writer tell this story? There are stories of Jesus resuscitating in the other Gospels, but the Lazarus story is unique to John's Gospel. And why did Jesus, after hearing that Lazarus is ill, wait until he knows that he is dead before he returns to Bethany? The Lazarus story is one of a series of healing events (the man who is cripple, and the man who is blind are also part of this series) and completes them. Each time Jesus heals (in John's Gospel) he is opposed. Yet, Jesus is shown in John's Gospel being oppositional only once: when he throws out the salespeople who have their stalls in the Temple area. Some religious leaders confront him for his actions. All other times he refrains from being oppositional. We are drawn into oppositional situations at various times of our lives. Most of us aren't thrilled by it though some seem to thrive on opposition. Opposition prevents us from being open. Opposition short circuits love from streaming through us. Our point of view is defined and defended (sometimes by using confusion). Maybe Jesus doesn't enter into opposition with others for that reason. He experiences God as openness and unity in the midst of diversity. It is this way of life that leads and guides him. God is good.
